La Quadrature du Net

La Quadrature du Net promotes and defends fundamental freedoms in the digital world. The association fights against censorship and surveillance, whether they come from States or private companies. It questions how digital and society influence each other. It works for a free, decentralized and emancipatory Internet.

Personal Data

La Quadrature du Net fights against the commodification of our personal data: so that no business may spy on our behaviour and manipulate us for commercial or political ends, especially by choosing what advertising and information we receive. It fights to prevent any decision about our lives (work, credit, study, etc.) from being taken automatically on the basis of these data.

Censorship

La Quadrature du Net fights for an Internet where everyone can decide which rules shape our exchanges. It refuses that these rules are set by a handful of private companies or applied automatically. La Quadrature du Net fights to prevent governments from censoring us authoritatively, especially for political ends.

Surveillance

La Quadrature du Net fights against the mass and arbitrary surveillance of States, notably for political ends, using the pretext of security. La Quadrature du Net strives to make these illegitimate practices known and to denounce them whilst changing the law in front of Parliament as much as in front of the courts.

Network

La Quadrature du Net fights for the Internet's infrastructure so it can be used and deployed by everyone, as easily as possible and in compliance with Net Neutrality. In particular, it supports and promotes associative Internet access providers by attempting to change the existing law and by publishing legal guides.
